

Do You Understand Me?

Being misunderstood isn't the best feeling in the world

You're a book being judged by your cover

It's like having a label taped on your forehead

It's like an incomplete story left for others to finish

It's like being under a magnifying glass focusing on your imperfections and nothing else

Being misunderstood makes you feel all alone

You begin to think no one will ever comprehend you

It's like being in a dark room filled with gossiping puppets

It's like the people you trust have gone away to share your secrets

It's like everyone's brain was programmed to ignore what you have to say

Being misunderstood makes you feel hopeless

It's like getting thrown into a deep pit in an isolated location

It's like falling in love with someone, you know doesn't love you back

It's like trying to explain yourself to someone that doesn't exist

Being misunderstood is complicated

It's like saying the letter "m" without your lips touching each other

It's like everyone's problems suddenly got attracted to you

It's like attempting to recover your memory after a serious case of amnesia

It's like trying to find yourself in less than five minutes

Being misunderstood is hard as a rock

Being misunderstood is frustrating

Being misunderstood is tough as an angry bull

Being misunderstood is indescribable